INTER-RELIGIOUS FAMILIES

HERE IS A MODERN AMERICAN FAMILY:

H, a young man who had been raised as a Buddhist, fell in love with W, a young woman from a Christian family. Although neither was all that “religious,” they decided to get married at a neutral site with both a Buddhist and Christian minister officiating. After the wedding, they were both busy with their jobs and did not give much thought to religion. Occasionally, they joined their families during major services at both the Buddhist Temple and the Christian Church.

With the births of their two children, B and G, however, H and W now have many questions: Should they raise B and G as Buddhists or as Christians? H and W would each like B and G to be raised according to their own family tradition. Yet, they don’t want to push their beliefs onto the other. H and W are very confused about this. They want to do the right thing, but haven’t been able to come to a decision. As a result, their children haven’t been going to either Buddhist Dharma School or Christian Sunday School. Not only that, H and W have been so confused and embarrassed about the whole situation, that they have stopped going to either the temple or church altogether.

This young couple and their children are fictitious. However, their questions and concerns are like those facing many inter-religious families today. When people from different religious traditions decide to form one family, they somehow must try to answer these kinds of questions: Should each person continue to follow his or her own faith? Should one of them “go over” to the other’s religion? If so, which one? What sort of wedding ceremony should they have? What sort of funeral? Should they take part in each other’s religious observances? Which religious holidays should they celebrate? How should they raise their children? Should the children be restricted to one religion, or should they be exposed to both? Who should decide for the children? One parent? Both? Should the children be given a choice? If so, at what age? Should the grandparents have any say? Should the decision be made for the couple by the church or temple?

Questions like these can be very difficult to answer. In some religions, the answers are very clear because it is the church that makes all of the decisions. The “outsider” spouse must convert or at least the children must be raised according to that religion. For the most part however, young couples in inter-religious families today must try to answer these kinds of questions by themselves in ways that are suitable for their particular situations.

I think that Buddhist temples and ministers can be of help. Our Buddhist temples should be prepared to help families who are dealing with these kinds of questions. Our Buddhist temples can provide opportunities for people to learn about Buddhism and what it means to be a Buddhist in today’s world. This can take place through sermons, study classes, publications, workshops, lectures, or informal discussions. It can also take place in the form of referrals to professional family therapists or in dialogue with clergy from other religions.

Our Buddhist temples can help enable an inter-religious family to make informed decisions, based upon a firm understanding of each member’s own religion. Education may help to prevent a Buddhist from converting to another religion “by default.” It may also encourage a family to become a Buddhist family. But, even more important, it may help decrease the likelihood that an inter-religious family will become “lost” to religion altogether through apathy or confusion. Instead, by becoming secure and knowledgeable in both religious traditions, the parents and children in that family will come to respect their own and other religions, and appreciate the richness of their family’s many traditions.

In this way, the members of an inter-religious family will be able to appreciate, and teach others, the importance of religion in our world today.

Presidents' Message

Greetings, Sangha friends.

We have heard many comments and compliments about how efficiently and beautifully our Centennial program was carried out. This was an example of how things get done at the Berkeley Buddhist Temple.

Dharma services, memorial and funeral services, Dharma school, the Satsuki Bazaar, and Bon Odori are some of the things that get done efficiently and well at the BBT.

So how do things get done?

Year in and year out, BBT programs and events get done through a special system. This system, like all systems, is a special arrangement of parts that interact with each other to function as a whole.

This system is our Sangha.

We have listened to many dharma talks about how all things are impermanent and how all things exist interdependently. It is also true that there are no two things, especially people, who are exactly alike.

Things get done at the BBT by embracing and bringing into play the diversity of temple members, guests and visitors. Our Sangha system has a culture that promotes mutual respect, acceptance, cooperation, and productivity among people who are different in age, gender, ethnic origin, education, occupation, physical abilities, race, sexual/affectional orientation, and many other perceived distinctions.

BBT is a place where people are encouraged to “come as you are.” Help, when needed, is quickly offered. This is how things get done at the BBT. With all of us working together, the results are truly wonderful. Thank you to everyone.

Gassho,

Art Nishimura and Willie Fernandez

The Paramita of Patience: Physical Therapy Exercises

by Diane Ames

What with my husband recovering from a broken kneecap and my own spinal stenosis, we do a lot of physical therapy exercises around here. And it has occurred to me that doing them is a sort of metaphor for the paramita of patience. I say it's a metaphor for it because while the bodhisattva practices perfect patience to save all sentient beings, we do leg lifts, wall squats, and the like to save ourselves from disability and pain. Oh, the thought that others need you, that you have a family to take care of, a temple to support, and so on, may help to spur you on, but basically you take up the dumbbells to ease your own backaches. However, the patient who faithfully performs his or her exercises can provide, for our limited minds, a sort of analogy to the bodhisattva's practice of this particular paramita.

Physical therapy exercises, like the bodhisattva's practices, must be performed over and over again through endless time. You may be required to stand on one leg for thirty seconds, then stand on the other leg for thirty seconds, and repeat the whole procedure twice every morning for the rest of your natural life.

They may have to be done over and over for a long time before any results are seen, if indeed they are ever obvious. In the case of the balance exercise described above, the best you can hope for is that you will not fall and break anything else. You will never even know what would have happened if you had not spent so much time standing on one leg like a crane.

They may have to be done with the knowledge that results may be imperfect. In some cases, they are sure to be imperfect. For example, physical therapy cannot cure spinal stenosis; nothing can. It can only slow its progression and mitigate the symptoms (you hope).

Often they must be done despite discouragement. In my husband's case, the first two weeks of exercises slowly strengthened his right leg but caused a sudden stabbing "overuse pain" in his left leg that sent him back to bed for days. (It passed, and he is making steady progress.)

So is it any wonder that only bodhisattvas can do this kind of thing with perfect patience? Yet there are many situations in which we ordinary humans must learn to exercise all the patience we can muster if we hope to do any good in this maddening world. Think of parenthood, for example. When this virtue wears thin, it may help to think of Dharmakara's ten kalpas of bodhisattva practices, or of physical therapy.

CENTENNIAL POSTSCRIPT

Our Centennial was truly a special day! Under blue skies and with much anticipation, close to 300 people squeezed into our temple to celebrate a Century of Gratitude and Joy! The commemorative service, chaired by David Ushijima, was especially meaningful with Socho Ogui and all the Bay District ministers in attendance. Their impressive procession into the hondo was beautifully accompanied by the Northern California Gagaku Group, whose members are mainly from our temple. Three generations representing temple families of the past and present presented the beautiful osonae (offerings) through the Oda, Kato, and Hamai families, accompanied by the beautiful song “Hana” by Natsukawa Rimi, in memory of the late David Watanabe. The beautiful keha tossed during the recitation of Sanbujo were cleverly made by our Dharma School students and teachers. Socho and Rev. Matsumoto delivered celebratory and meaningful dharma messages. Our own Sangha Singers led in the singing of “Arigatou” to express gratitude for all the causes and conditions leading to our Centennial.

The logistics of moving this crowd after the service to our photo session and to the luncheon were challenging to say the least, but Judy Kono was well prepared for the feat, directing her able and efficient volunteers! The timing was flawless throughout the day. Leroy Morishita served as luncheon MC. All were treated to an original skit written and composed by Dii Lewis with temple members Lorin Kagehiro as one of the vocalists, Carl Wilmsen on the banjo, and Miri and Takashi Nikaidoh as narrators. Our Dharma School students made up the fantastic chorus with their sweet refrains. The finale was a spirited group sing-along led by Dii, who urged us all to “Join the Dharma Line” into the next 100 years...

Some Centennial highlights:

We were very honored to have close to 50 Keiro members attend our service and luncheon.

Former BBT minister Rev. Fujitani traveled all the way from Japan to share this day with us, accompanied by his daughter, Yuri and her husband, Takuya Tsujimoto. We were also delighted that Rev. and Mrs. Matsubayashi and Rev. Hardiman also came back to join the celebration.

We are most grateful for our specially commissioned Shinran statue, which now stands in the back of our hondo and was donated by Rev. and Mrs. Seishin Yamashita and Bukkyo Dendo Kyokai America...and for our new Founders Rock, which represents the spirit and dedication of our pioneers who laid down the foundation for our temple 100 years ago.

Our Centennial was a reunion for many people once-active in our temple in the '50s and '60s who came back to be part of this historic event. It was wonderful to connect with them again.

Thank you to all the many hands that have contributed so much to the success of our Centennial. We wish to thank Rev. David and Mrs. Diane Matsumoto, all the planning committee members, architects, graphic artists, artists, photographers, fundraisers, and the many people whose efforts seen and unseen have helped in so many ways too numerous to count. We are also indebted to the many donors who have contributed so generously so that we could complete our Centennial projects and events in a very meaningful way. Words are truly inadequate to express our profound gratitude to you all...

 SECOND PLACE WINNER! *****

At the Bay District Council Amida's Family Conference on November 5 at Southern Alameda County Buddhist Church, a Tsukemono Contest was one of the activities. All Bay District temples submitted one type of homemade tsukemono for tasting. The judges were the Bay District ministers, the guest speaker, Rev. Yukiko Motoyoshi from the Stockton Buddhist Temple, and a couple of Bay District lay members in attendance. First place was awarded to SACBC, second to Berkeley Buddhist Temple, and third to Buddhist Church of San Francisco.

Berkeley's tsukemono was made by Mrs. Yuki Otake using Mrs. Taka Watanabe's recipe. (Mrs. Watanabe is Miki Adachi's aunt.) Thank you, Yuki, for making it and thank you, Mrs. Watanabe, for sharing your recipe. Here is the simple, delicious recipe which certainly was worthy of second place. After tasting it, I'm sure you'll agree that it's a winner!

CUCUMBER TSUKEMONO

1 cup water	2 English cucumbers
$\frac{3}{4}$ cup sugar	red pepper (optional)
$\frac{1}{4}$ cup vinegar (American)
1 Tbsp. salt

Unpeeled cucumber sliced in approximately 1/8 inch thick pieces.

Combine water, sugar, vinegar, salt and boil. Cool.

Place cucumber into container and pour in cooled ingredients, cover and refrigerate.

Ready to eat the next day, however tsukemono tastes better the second day.

Preferable to be consumed within three days.

Recipe provided by Taka Watanabe.

Teacher Openings for Daruma no Gakko Summer Program 2012

Are you looking for an opportunity to teach elementary school students over the summer of 2012?

Do you have a knowledge of and enthusiasm for Japanese culture?

We have the position for you!

Daruma no Gakko is a non-profit, four-week summer school run exclusively by parent volunteers. The program is designed for children in grades K-6 to learn about their heritage through the school's unique Japanese American curriculum. Daruma no Gakko was originally conceived as a program to develop strong, positive self-images and identities through the study of Japanese American history, literature, language, music, art, food, field trips and community involvement.

We are looking for current or retired teachers with teaching credentials. The curriculum is established, so you will be able to step in and follow a predetermined four-week lesson plan.

Also, if you have school-age children enrolled in Daruma no Gakko they will receive half off their tuition. You will receive a modest honorarium and will also be adored and greatly appreciated by students and their families.

Interested applicants should request an application or further information at: dngreg@gmail.com
