The Logic of Other Power [2]

SELF-POWER IS A DIRTY WORD or so some would have us believe.

How many times has someone told us this? We in Jōdo Shinshū should not try to perform any kind of religious practice for to do so would be to engage in self-power. Any attempt to attain enlightenment through our own efforts shows a lack of faith. We must stop trying to realize truth; then and only then will we be able to accept and rely upon Other Power.

These words might be quite profound. But, in another sense, couldn't they also be the result of making Other Power into a thing? A great "Other" will exercise his power to save us only when we give up any attempt to do it ourselves. Words can really confuse us at times. Not only that. They can become the chains of dogma that keep us from doing anything.

Self-power is not a synonym for self-effort. Shinran Shōnin, I believe, did not mean to keep us from trying to attain the truth. He did not focus his criticism on self-effort. Rather, he urged us to abandon the "mind of self-power." That is, he warned us against being convinced that "one is good ... relying on the self ... reflecting knowingly on one's evil heart ... and ... judging people as good and bad."¹ The word self-power, it would seem, points to our arrogance, to the fact that we are full of ourselves. We think that we are the good ones, the righteous ones, the masters of the universe. We have it all figured out; we pull the strings and everything dances before us.

Here I think that it would be useful to think of self-power as a kind of logic. It would go something like this:

I try very hard —————> and as a result of my efforts —————> I attain enlightenment.

Now, this kind of logic makes sense to us, for we use it everyday to great effect. We use the logic of self-power to gain success and make a lot of money. The logic of self-power builds pyramids and skyscrapers. It sends rockets to the moon. And in that sense, it is vital to our lives and our civilization.

But the logic of self-power can also lead to prejudice, war and pollution. That is because its central tenet is that we attain great things as a result of our mighty efforts. This logic provides a very thin mask for our arrogance and egotism, which always lurk behind it, never to be seen or brought into question. This logic does not question our arrogance; it encourages it.

In contrast, the logic of Other Power pulls away the mask and forces us to see ourselves for the first time. This is how I would render this startling logic:

I try very hard —————> but in spite of my efforts —————> I attain enlightenment.

Here our arrogant pride is pulled out from behind the mask and brought into question. This kind of logic is hard to swallow because we are not used to it. In everyday life, perhaps we only encounter the logic of Other Power in the experience of love. Fear, loyalty and even respect can and must be earned. But true love is never deserved. We receive love despite who we are.

In matters of love and life we must try to do the best we can, for our own sake and the sake of others. And yet, when we look deeply and honestly at ourselves, we come to a remarkable realization: Everything important and valuable in love and life comes from outside ourselves, in spite of ourselves.

Amida Buddha's Vow of great compassion is like love in that respect. It is the basic wish of all life, which is to become itself and give itself freely to others. It is the wish that, in spite of our arrogance and reluctance, we might be able to know ourselves, become ourselves and live our true lives. May we all hear that wish and may that wish become our own.

PRESIDENTS' MESSAGE

After spending the past couple of months crossing out 2014 on checks and other documents, I am now used to writing "2015." It is funny how it takes us longer to get to the understanding that changes, like what year it is, have occurred.

We recently held our General Meeting for our membership and discussed how 2014 will be different from 2015. We presented a broad overview of our Temple and then discussed the current state of the Temple's finances. We are lucky to be part of an organization that is continuing to see growth, both in the number of members and also in our demographic makeup. Also presented were some of the projects we completed in 2014 and some of the ideas we have on tap for 2015. A big "Thank You" to all of you who were in attendance.

One of our projects for 2015, the renovation of the barbeque pits, has been in process for the past couple of weeks. We have expanded the project to now include the improvement of drainage in the courtyard. The work should be completed soon. Until it is done though, please be cautious of the materials in the courtyard.

We recently received an update from our Bazaar Committee. It always seems like the Bazaar "sneaks up" on us, but the committee has actually been meeting regularly since the start of the year and everything appears to be on schedule. Please look for communications regarding the work schedule. If you have any conflicts, please discuss them with the respective chair of the Bazaar duty to which you were assigned. The Bazaar Committee is always looking for more dedicated members of our Sangha to help. If you would like to assist, their meetings are held the last Tuesday of each month leading up to the Bazaar itself. Some dates to remember are Sunday, May 3, Bazaar Construction Day; Saturday and Sunday, May 16 and 17, the days of the Bazaar; and Tuesday, May 19, Bazaar Clean Up. The Bazaar is a significant source of funding for our operations and as such, we implore you all to join making this a wonderful event. Through our participation we can convey our gratitude to the Temple and those who have gone before us for all they have provided.

We look forward to seeing you all and thank you for your support in 2015!

Gassho,

Takashi Nikaidoh and Ron Hiraga

1952

By Diane Ames

Coverage of the anniversary of the Selma march has reminded me of something that happened even before that. I think I was five or just turned six years old, being taken along on an expedition of the Austin (Texas) Gem and Mineral Society to hunt agates somewhere out in the country. It must have been towards the end of summer, because from the bus's window I saw ragged people, mostly black-skinned people, picking cotton in the merciless sun. Being a child, I soon wanted to go to the bathroom and was glad when the bus stopped at a gas station.

The women and girls of the Society, all of whom were white, lined up in front of what must have been the gas station's ladies room, though I could not yet read the sign on the door. When I had finally gotten to the bathroom and was leaving with relief, I noticed that there were ragged black women, presumably cotton pickers, lined up in front of a tumbledown outhouse which also had a mysterious sign on the door and was in back of the gas station.

I did not yet see injustice. It would be more than a decade before I would at last see that. I did see grownups acting oddly and so naively asked my grandmother, why didn't those women also use the bathroom with the flush toilet? My grandmother, who was clearly upset by the question, said something like, "That's just how it is," and changed the subject. For my grandmother was a kind-hearted woman, and I believe that it was only by not thinking, just not thinking, about the whole abomination that was legal segregation that she could live at all.

I was very little then. By the time I had been in school for a while, it simply never occurred to me to ask why all my classmates were white. I knew that black people existed. (The term African-American had not yet been coined.) They were, in fact, ubiquitous in Dixie, and I had observed that some of them were children. But although I was generally an inquisitive child, I never even wondered where those children went during the day. By then I must have learned, must indeed have internalized, the lesson that some questions must not be asked because some social arrangements must not be questioned. As a military dependent, I went to elementary school in places like East Point, Georgia. I imagine that seeing the so-called schools they put black children in there might have been a shock. It is even possible that it might have shocked some of my white elders. But we all made no effort to see them or even speculate about them. It was safer to let sleeping dogs, or rather sleeping issues, lie, even in our minds.

It was all an excellent example of what the Buddha meant by ignorance.

Dear Sangha Friends,

The warm spring has finally arrived. Cherry blossoms are preparing to bloom. We hope you are doing well in the Compassionate Light of the Buddha.

April is the month of O-Hanamatsuri, the celebration of the birthday of Shakyamuni Buddha. Buddhists all over the world celebrate his birth. At the Berkeley Buddhist Temple, we will celebrate Hanamatsuri on Sunday, April 12 from 9:30 AM. We will have a beautiful hanamido decorated by the 6th to 8th graders of our Dharma School. There will be a Dharma School program as well. There will also be a Hatsumairi service for infants. A coffee social will follow the service.

Please come and observe this auspicious occasion at our temple.

An envelope is attached for your special Hanamatsuri donation. The Temple greatly appreciates your thoughtful generosity.

HATSUMAIRI
INFANT PRESENTATION CEREMONY
Sunday, April 12, 2015

We cordially invite you to bring your newborns and children up to one year of age to participate in our annual Hatsumairi Ceremony, which is to take place during our Hanamatsuri service on Sunday, April 12, 2015.

Hatsumairi literally means “first Buddhist service.” Often translated as “Infant Presentation Service,” Hatsumairi represents the first opportunity for parents to bring infants who were born during the previous year to our Temple. At the same time, it gives our Temple the opportunity to give expression to the Primal Vow of Amida Buddha, which embraces people of all ages, genders, races and social strata.

If you wish to participate, please complete the form below and return it to the temple by Sunday, April 5. Please call the temple at (510) 841-1356 if you have any questions regarding this ceremony. Thank you!

CARDBOARD FOR BAZAAR

Costco shopping trip? New appliance in your future?

The 2015 Satsuki Bazaar needs cardboard to cover the kitchen, Old Temple and booth floors. If you could collect some large pieces of cardboard and bring them to the back of the Social Hall in the next few weeks before the Bazaar, it would be greatly appreciated. A good source for the large pieces of cardboard is the liners between items on the pallets at Costco (they allow you to collect them as you shop). Another good source is the box from that large appliance or big screen tv.

Thanks for your help,
